Mariza, fado, Wed, 4/8

2 pairs

Born in Mozambique and raised in Portugal, Mariza began singing Fado as a child, before she could read. In 1999 she performed in tribute concerts for the Queen of Fado, Amália Rodrigues, and in 2000 she received the "Voice of Fado" award. She has since been declared one of the "100 most important women in Europe" and has played throughout the world—and at the Wisconsin Union Theater.

Fado is Portugal's passionate, bittersweet and emotional music, full of passion, sorrow, jealousy, grief, and often satire. "Mariza's appearance was striking...she sang an old fado, with her voice swelling to reach climaxes that were just short of tears." (New York Times)

Dobet Gnahore, Ivory Coast, F, 5/1

2 pairs

She was the female star of Acoustic Africa—and she's coming back with her own band!

Dobet Gnahore dances, plays percussion - and sings in seven African languages and French. Her band includes French and Tunisian members as well as her master percussionist father Boni Gnahoré. Apart from the sounds of her homeland, Côte Ivoire, her music incorporates echoes of Cameroonian, Congolese and East African sounds. Her socially conscious lyrics deal with subjects such as the AIDS pandemic, the importance of family, village life and remembering your roots.

Onstage, says the BBC, "Dobet is a vivacious bundle of energy, blessed with a powerful voice and infectious charisma. She wears sumptuous Afro-chic outfits, and her hair extensions toss as she swaps a flute for a thumb piano, a shaker or just a pair of dancing shoes."

Latin Grammy Award winner David Sánchez is being hailed as the most profound young tenor saxophonist working today. World-renowned jazz critic Howard Reich saluted him, saying, "Technically, tonally and creatively, he seems to have it all. His sound is...plush, his pitch is unerring, his rapid-fire playing is ravishing in its combination of speed, accuracy and utter evenness of tone."

Born in Guaynabo, Puerto Rico, Sánchez has played with musicians such as Eddie Palmieri, Paquito D'Rivera, Dizzy Gillespie, Roy Haynes, Charlie Haden, and Miriam Makeba.

In his music, Sanchez expands the frontiers of mainstream jazz to incorporate a rich array of Afro-Latin influences. Says the Chicago Tribune, "[Sanchez's] performance
